Course Description
This course introduces "church health/growth" as a scientific field of study and as a philosophical framework for fulfilling the Great Commission. We will look at the historical roots of the Church Growth movement and learn the terminology used by Church Growth scholars. Special attention will be given to theological, sociological and cultural aspects affecting the rate and patterns of church expansion. In addition to an overview of the whole church growth movement, we will deal specifically with John Wesley's approach to evangelism and church growth.

Specific Objectives

By semester’s end, my goal is that students taking this course will have the ability to:

1. Identify and describe the significance of major figures in the church growth movement
2. Describe how Wesley implemented various strategies credited to today’s church growth movement
3. Analyze the validity of arguments relating to church growth including an identification of their presuppositions and consequences
4. Analyze a specific congregation and its surrounding community
5. Describe a plan for discipling and assimilating new converts into the church
6. Identify social and congregational factors that influence church growth
7. Conceive and articulate purpose, mission, vision and strategic plans for a local church
8. Develop team building skills, identify and cultivate spiritual gifts, recruit volunteers, diagnose and intervene in problems
9. Ability to synthesize, analyze, reason logically for discernment, assessment, and problem solving as it relates to church growth

Course assignments are planned with the student’s career objective in mind. Students planning on a ministry in North America will do reading and study of church growth in that environment. Students planning on a cross-cultural ministry will be encouraged to do reading and study of global church growth.

Explanation of Course Requirements

1. Regular attendance is expected. Everything that goes on in the classroom — lectures, debates and even spontaneous discussion — is part of the learning experience. Therefore, absences after the first four will reduce one’s course grade.

2. Reading

   a. Double Entry Notes on textbook reading. Turn in a page or less of “double-entry” notes for each assigned section. Create two columns on your sheet. At the top of the left column write: “Insight, concept, principle.” Above the right column, write: “This makes sense /I can use this/This relates to . . . ./Now I know why . . .” As you read the assigned section, use this double-entry sheet to record your thoughts. These are due at the beginning of the class period.

<tr>

<td>It makes sense for local church leaders to have a feel for the limits of “reasonable driving distance” from their building</td>
</tr>
<tr>

<td>Ask about in class (page 36)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

b. Journal/Magazine Articles. Read at least two significant journal or magazine articles on church growth subjects and compare them with each other.

c. Book outline. Outline thoroughly a book on church growth. This should take as many as five pages, single-spaced. In addition to your outline, write down your favorite quote from the book(s). The report must cover at least 200 pages of reading. If you have selected a book shorter than that, supplement it with an additional source. Don’t be content with selecting the easiest or the quickest to find. Look for something dealing directly in your area of special interest. A suggested bibliography appears at the end of this syllabus.

3. Statistical graph. Make a 10-year comparative statistical graph of two churches (or districts or mission fields).

   - You may chart either year-end church membership or yearly average Sunday School attendance.
   - You may either draw this by hand on graph paper or use computer graphing software.
   - To construct this decadal graph you will need 11 years of statistics.
   - Many districts produce such local church graphs for their district assembly each year. You can construct your own from the statistical tables can be found in the back pages of the annual District Assembly Journals at the SNU library periodicals desk.
   - This information is also available at the Church Growth Research Center in Kansas City.

   To the graph itself, add one page of observations and preliminary hypotheses concerning the similarities or differences in growth patterns.

4. In-depth study of a local church. Select a smaller church (under 200 in attendance) in the OKC metro area to analyze in detail. Missions students are urged to do their study on an ethnic congregation (such as an Hispanic one, First Indian, Korean or OKC Providence). On the first day of class of each month students must submit a 1-page progress report on their local church research study.

   Among the sections into which a good church growth diagnostic study can be divided are:

   a. Decadal graphing of attendance in Sunday school and in morning worship
   b. Neighborhood demographic data and how the realities behind that data are affecting the church
   c. Historical sketch of congregation: How started, high and low points, key events and people whose influence is still felt
   d. Mission statement and objectives as articulated by pastor and key leaders. What does the church leadership want? In which areas are they achieving their objectives? In which areas are they not?
   e. What people and finances are being employed to effect church growth
   f. Report on interviews/survey of selected members
g. Analysis of facilities
h. A look at administrative, structural and procedural strengths and weaknesses
i. A look at the entry points for new people as well as the exit points for those who are leaving or have left (Why do new people come? Why do people leave?)
j. Based on what you see and feel, what part do you think the Lord envisions for this church to play in achieving His Great Commission?
k. Is there any significant data which you think local church leaders are misreading or ignoring?
l. Some realistic goals for the next few years and what it would take to achieve those goals
m. A plan for action (“If I were the pastor . . .”)

As you work on the growth projections, remember that this is not to be simply “day-dreaming.” They are to be defensible decisions based on the data you have accumulated. Your analysis must build on course material; it must not be something you could have written last summer before the course ever started. The written report, which will probably run 15 to 30 pages, must include at least 3 quotes from the textbooks or direct references to material in them.

5. Classroom presentation. In groups of 2 or 3, students will make a 20-minute teaching presentation of a chapter from Hunter’s book to the class. The use of overheads, PowerPoints or other visuals is greatly encouraged. Creativity will be rewarded. Grades will be based on how effectively the content of that chapter is communicated to students.
